Q&A- Entry-to-practice Exam

Do both universities in NB have comparable academic acceptance regulations?

Entrance requirements and progression policies at University of New Brunswick, and at Université de Moncton are significantly different. The criteria for admission can be found on the university program websites. Progression policies determine the point at which students can be placed on academic probation or recommended to transition to a different program of study. Progression policies can also determine when students are required to complete remedial work (including repeating of a course/clinical), and how many courses/clinical sessions can be repeated by a student.
