Q&A- Entry-to-practice Exam

What is an entry-to-practice exam?

Many professions require graduates to write an entry-to-practice exam after completing a degree in their chosen profession. Professions which use an entry-to-practice exam include: medicine; law; engineering; pharmacy; nursing; etc. Other professions also require success on an entry-to-practice exam before giving a graduate a license to practice. The entry-to-practice exam is meant to test graduates to determine if the graduate(s) is competent to practice (medicine, law, nursing) safely.
